
Title: Skara Brae

Author:

Both the name for the city and the island due west of Britain, Skara Brae is a central point for seafaring expeditions heading westward. Spacious and widespread like Yew, Skara is reminiscent of a renaissance village in the middle of the medieval Scottish highlands. The houses are intermixed with shops, schools, and parks, all connected via stone walkways.

Most of the houses and shops are made of Britannian wood and plaster, though the more permanent (and important) structures are made of stone. Around the
